Network During the Holidays?

The holidays are coming up and many people think they should give their job search a break. While it is true that there is less hiring activity because many people take vacations, it is wrong to assume that nothing gets done.

With the economy the way it is, people are not taking as much vacation time as they may have in the past. And that includes hiring managers. While many job seekers are taking this time off, why don't you use this opportunity to take advantage of a bit less competition?

The holiday period is a terrific time for networking...parties, parties, parties. It's a great excuse to contact people you haven't seen all year. Send out holiday greetings, invite people out or over. If you are invited to parties, GO! Host a party yourself. Being among your friends will lift your spirits and your self confidence.

When contacting friends, be sure to ...read more

Q: What are your top 3 tips for job seekers?

A: Given the challenges of this tough market, here are my top 3 recommendations:

1. Make sure your resume clearly spells out your qualifications for your target position.
2. Prepare thoroughly for job interviews; don't leave anything to chance.
3. Seek help early - whether you work with peers or seek professional assistance, doing it early will lessen your frustration. Shortening the time you're unemployed will more than pay for professional services.
